DRAWING ATTENTION TO... THE CONCESSION SCHEME

Drawing Attention... is an annual campaign launched by the Royal Drawing School to fund a different area of the School's work each year. The School receives no public funding, so we need to raise  $\pounds$ 1.9 million each year to continue to run our programmes.

Our inaugural appeal, 'Drawing Attention to the Concessions Scheme', will help to ensure high-quality tuition in drawing is available to all, regardless of circumstance. Our concessions scheme offers discounts of 10% – 75%, reflecting the School's commitment to making all courses offered affordable to those who are serious about drawing from observation. People who can benefit from the scheme are art students, art teachers, early career artists, those on job seekers allowance or disability support, the local community of Tower Hamlet and Hackney and in some cases, artists over the age of 60.

In addition to the fee concessions the School gives out, the full fee for any Public Programme course is also subsidised to ensure courses are accessible to the widest range of people.

Last year the total value of concessionary discounts given to Public Programme students was £75,000, with approximately 25% of all Public Programme students receiving some type of concession. All proceeds from the 2016/2017 campaign will go towards bolstering the School's concession scheme and ensuring we can continue to make quality tuition in drawing available to all.
